

A software company could use customer usage data to identify which features of their product are most popular. They could then focus their development efforts on improving these features and adding new features that customers want.